How do you get the game keys for Kenshi and my. The present invention relates to a process for the production of sulfuric acid by the acid-catalyzed reaction of a low-sulfur hydrocarbon feedstock. More particularly, the present invention relates to a process for producing sulfuric acid from a hydrocarbon feedstock which contains both olefins and paraffins. There are a number of processes for the production of sulfuric acid by acid-catalyzed reactions of olefins or paraffins. One such process involves the partial oxidation of paraffins, and another involves the partial oxidation of olefins to form organic sulfur compounds which, in the presence of a diluent, are converted to sulfuric acid. The products of both of these processes have contained, as by-products, quantities of excess hydrogen (dehydrogenation products). These effluents, which are formed in substantial amounts, cannot be recycled for economic reasons. This, of course, contributes to the high cost of production of the process. In order to utilize hydrogen from refinery off-gas for a sulfuric acid production, it is desirable to upgrade the gas to a purity which permits it to be used directly. As it is produced in relatively low volume by such processes as reforming and water gas shift reactions, it is relatively inexpensive. Another commercial process in which hydrogen is generated from a hydrogen-containing gas is the production of methanol. While the hydrogen is employed directly in the methanol synthesis reaction, additional hydrogen may be derived and utilized by other processes. In either case, the hydrogen may be recycled for further utilization. It is recognized in the art that a sulfuric acid process using hydrogen from a refinery effluent would have additional advantages in view of the use of the refinery-produced hydrogen for the conversion of paraffins to sulfur, for the production of ammonia,
